12. Wednesday, October 10: Deborah McDowell, University of Virginia: "The I/Eye of Record: Remembering the Civil Rights Movement." 4:30 at HISB.

Focusing on photography in the making of the Civil Rights Movement, Deborah McDowell's talk will survey the iconic images of the period summarized by police dogs and firehoses turned on passive demonstrators, for example, and their hold on all subsequent representations of the period, including first person accounts. The 'I' of personal memory is eclipsed by the camera's 'eye.' The presentation will also examine these signature images of the Civil Rights Movement in relation to now commonplace theories of photography, particularly those that see photographic signification as exercised in pictorial conventions that are never 'purely' photographic. Photographic meaning is, then, the outcome of an interplay of iconic, graphic, and narrative conventions.

Deborah McDowell teaches American literature in the English Department of the University of Virginia, where she has been a full professor since 1987. McDowell is one of the foremost scholars of Black American literature.

13. Thursday-Friday, October 11-12: Humanities Institute and le Collge International de Philosophie, Paris, present Politics and Filiation 3: "Sorority/Fraternity Sisterhood/Brotherhood"

Brotherhood is supposed to constitute the sediment that guarantees--at least according to the French republican ideal--freedom and equality. Brotherhood is thought to foster the feeling of belonging, a sort of political 'friendship' ensuring a social cohesion that reason alone cannot guarantee.

Brotherhood and sisterhood alike bear a religious heritage that of cosmopolitanism and the universal word which unbind the individual from her or his family ties in order that she or he be integrated into the community of women-sisters and men-brothers. Yet if there is love between sisters and brothers, this love is unnatural: 'brotherland' is marred by rivalries and hatred at the heart of the horde. Politics can foster strife between brotherly enemies.

Conference contributors are: Diane Barthel-Bouchier, Alain David, Jean-Yves Guerin, Jean-Pierre Marcos, Francois Noudelmann, Mary Rawlinson, Antonia Soulez, Patrick Vauday, E. Ann Kaplan.

15. CELT Workshop:

Evaluating Writing AND Handling the Paper Load with Anne
Beaufort, Thursday, October 18th, 11:00am - 12:00pm at CELT

Do you sometimes feel the time you spend giving written comments on students? writing isn't leading students to improve their writing as much as you'd wish? Do you spend a lot of time (and red ink) marking students? grammatical errors, only to find they keep making the same mistakes in subsequent papers? Or do you avoid giving writing assignments because of the time-intensive task of reading and grading them? In this workshop, we'll examine the research on teacher comments on student writing as a pedagogical tool and discuss strategies for giving feedback on student writing that are effective and efficient uses of your time. We'll also examine the rhetoric of teacher comments to see what signals we send to students by our words. If at all possible, bring a sample student paper that you have written comments on. For more information and to register please go to www.celt.sunysb.edu.

27. Emergency Evacuations

The Department of Environmental Health & Safety (EH&S) has prepared an Emergency Evacuation planning guide to help you plan for emergencies. In the event of a fire or other emergency, seconds count. The safe, orderly and prompt evacuation of building occupants depends on having the physical safety features of a building in operating condition as well as having an emergency evacuation plan. The cooperation and participation of every building occupant is essential. Every person that lives and works in a building on campus has an individual responsibility to know how to evacuate in an emergency and to accomplish the evacuation when the fire alarm device sounds or when directed by an authority. The guide is available though the EH&S website. Please visit the website to obtain a copy of the guide and for additional environmental, health & safety information. If you need further assistance, please call EH&S at X2-6410.
