Correction:

In the Nov 4 issue of the Monroe Doctrine, in the article entitled "Traps Almost Catch People," it was incorrectly stated that the Humane Society took the Beaver that lost it's leg from the trap. That Beaver was, to this date, never found. Also, the officer that was mentioned was incorrectly named as Marty Gilmore. The actual name was Officer Nyquist

No Shots, No School

by Bonita Howell

"Due to their failure to comply with the laws of the state of New York, one hundred and forty-three students have been suspended from MCC", says Mr. Thomas Flynn, Vice President, Student Affairs. Public Health Law 206 requires that all students born on or after January 1, 1957 be immunized against measles, mumps and rubella, or they cannot attend college.

Flynn went on to say that in the Spring '91 semester an excess of $50,000 was spent to inform MCC's students of this requirement, with additional expenditures to cover the costs incurred in hiring extra personnel to administer and document the inoculation procedure.

Mr. Ronald Gigliotti, Associate Vice President of Student Association said, "A letter informing students about this requirement was appended to applications for admittance to MCC, and a second communication was sent to prospective students with their acceptance letters. Additionally, two post card mailings were sent out from the nursing office, and another two sets of reminders were mailed from the Student Association offices."

"We have gone above and beyond the duties of our office," Flynn added, "to inform students about these immunization regulations, in an effort to encourage students to accept responsibility in this matter." He went on to say that it is these kinds of expenditures of time, effort and dollar costs; these delays, which aid in increasing tuitions.

Flynn also said that there are valid reasons for this stringent law. There have been serious outbreaks of infectious disease at universities in Geneseo, Brockport, and Buffalo, but none, so far, at MCC. "Such an outbreak at a community col-

The Lady Tribunes completed their season in the National Junior College Athletic Association Region III championship. The tournament was held at Hudson Valley Community College on November 2 and 3. The team finished second in the region overall.

The women's soccer team won Saturday's game against Herkimer Community College with the solid score of 2-0. Both goals were scored by Jonelle Corsey, the team's leading scorer. An assist was made by left-winger Michelle Zazzaro. Goal keeper Dawn MacDonald had her twelfth and final shutout of the season.

by Jennifer Hoff

Two fire drills last Wednesday, November 6, forced students in three of MCC's buildings out into the cold air.

The first drill went off around 10:30 in the morning, the other one around 4:30 p.m. The false alarm "drills" in building three were caused by a "defective smoke detector head", according to Jack Burkhardt, in the loading dock, which will be replaced.

Students in the brick lounge had to be evacuated and did not leave immediately on their own. The best way to avoid danger of even a simple fire drill is to exit the building quickly and safely, without public safety, teachers or other students prodding fellow students out of the building. The annoying ring of the alarm should at least be a sign of warning to exit the build-

Supervisor of Safety and Training.

Why wasn't the smoke detector fixed as soon as it malfunctioned? Burkhardt had no answer to that question. However, he did say that it was in the process of being repaired.

Michael J. Harrington, Director of Public Safety, confirmed that it was a defective smoke detector and indicated that it was the air handling unit, ing.

There is a state education law that requires colleges and universities to have at least one fire drill each semester. It can be a planned drill or a malfunction, such as: What happened in buildings one, two and three? However, MCC has not fulfilled the state requirement and the drill didn't involve the entire campus.

Women's Issues

by Robin LeVasseur

I will assume that everyone will agree with me when I say human beings are very unique creatures. Our diversity will attest to that alone. We are capable of accomplishing almost anything. Our creativity knows no bounds. Women, specifically, have been bestowed with far greater attributes such as sensitivity, ability to nurture, a gentle and giving nature, and a capacity to adapt to any situation imaginable. The list goes on.. Why then do women significantly suffer from low self-esteem and poor self-concept? Could it be that our environment affects us so much that we internalize everything? Could it be that our society demands so much from us that we are automatically set up for failure? Or could it be that we never learned to love ourselves?

I'm not sure why it happens, but it does happen, and that is why it is crucially important that we confront this personal monster. It's safe to say that there is an inordinate number of women who suffer from low self-esteem. It's impossible to recognize on sight because it crosses all social classes. It's like a fungus that spreads out of control. We either suffer from it, or we encounter it everyday. It can paralyze us if we let it.

It's scary to think of how truly powerful and deceiving it is. It will consume a perfectly wonderful deserving woman, and convince her that she is totally worthless. Consider, if you will, the profile of a professional woman with chronic low self-esteem. She, who will remain nameless, is married and the mother of two. Her marriage is bad, and her husband is insufferable. They were married shortly after graduating from college, and not long afterwards she had their first child soon to be followed by the next. By society's standards she was a good mother (meaning she gave of herself until there was nothing left). She is exceptional at her job. All day and everyday she gives of herself at work and in the home. The needs of others outweigh her own needs.

Unfortunately she gets lit-weight. She says it reminds her of what she is, and it will serve to change her. She doesn't realize that wearing that pig only reinforces her already poor self-esteem. The stories don't just stop here. There are many more.

All day and everyday she gives of herself at work and in the home. The needs of others outweigh her own needs.

tle in return. Her husband constantly berates her and consequently she gets little or no respect from her children. She is not overweight yet her husband continually reminds her that she is by no means perfect. All of this has worked on her in such a way that she wears a pig on her ID badge where her face should be. She says that she will remove it as soon as she loses the

What about the young girl who sits in her house all day because she thinks that she is stupid and ugly? She will never know anything different if she doesn't get out of the internal hole that she has dug for herself. Sure, maybe she retreated there for protection at first, but now the hole has become much more than that for her. It has now become her way of life.

Let's consider the woman who walks around in the world with her eyes to the ground because she doesn't feel deserving enough to make eye contact with others. She feels that she can go unnoticed and she probably will. How horrible self-hate is. It mustn't be allowed to fester. How do we over come low self-esteem? .

Why not look in the mirror and positively affirm to ourselves that we are worthy of living life. We are deserving of happiness. We don't have to buy into what others believe to be the truth about us. All we need to be concerned with is what we think about ourselves; this is truly all we have control over. If we could only convert all the negative in our lives into the positive we will have won half the battle. We do not need to gauge our self worth based on our mate's perception. We are the only significant person in our lives.

Now no one is saying that the road to a better self-image is easily traveled, but it can be said that it is possible to change a lifetime of self-defeating behavior. All you have to do is want it, and take the time to learn how to love yourself. In the book The Art of Loving by Erich Fromm he discusses the concept of self love. He states, "While it raises no objection to apply the concept of love to various objects, it is a widespread belief that while it is virtuous to love others, it is not to love oneself." He goes on to conclude that, "If it is a virtue to love my neighbor as a human being, it must be a virtue and not a vice, to love myself since I am a human being too. There is no concept of man in which I myself am not included."

We all have it within ourselves to be whatever we choose. We can choose to be happy regardless of what life does out to us. Remember it is your life and no one else's. We can choose to be productive and succeed in life. Our growth as women can blossom into something quite beautiful. Most of us have the capacity to bring life into the world, but we all have the ability to breathe a better life back into ourselves. We are truly amazing.

Bill of Rights: HAPPY BIRTHDAY

censored. They did not possess that fundamental right that we take for granted: the right to say what is on our minds. Our founding fathers, Paine and Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, considered this right so crucial to our nation's future they made it a part of our constitution: the first amendment.

Granted, it has been abused. It is often a precipice that leads to libel and slander. But we need to know that we can criticize our leaders if we feel they deserve it, and we must be able to inform the public about the mistakes they make and the wrongs being perpetrated. Our freedom to say all we need to say is never felt more than when we don't have it.

Ironically, one of our greatest presidents interfered with this right. He felt it was for the common good; that's for history to judge. But during a bloody civil war Abraham Lincoln often felt it necessary to shut down those papers that were spreading information that could be used by the enemy and imprisonment on those editors and public personages that spoke against his administration. Whether it was necessary or not belies the point that we require the ability to speak our minds.

It is an awesome responsibility. We who accept it, people who call themselves journalists and who are aware that we have the ability to affect public opinion, must try to remember that we cannot be the National Enquirer. The words we print must be carefully considered, our research must be valid and our opinions must not be contradictory.

Coming to MCC on November 11, at noon, is Dr. Robert Maddox, an authority on the Bill of Rights. As this is the Bicentennial of this wonderfully written document, is a perfect time to reread our forefathers famous words. This was originally set to keep the few as free as the masses. The principals then and now are the same, all people are created equal and our constitution, even as old as it is, still holds its' own.

We here at the MD have been laboring for twenty years now, current staff and former, to bring to the population of MCC all that we consider pertinent enough for you to read. This newspaper belongs to all of you, not just this staff, and if you believe in the first amendment and what it represents you can't be afraid to share your views. You have the freedom to vote, the freedom to live where you choose, an incalculable number of freedoms that most countries do not possess. One of these is to speak out about what troubles you. If you do not, you're invisible. To your fellow man, you do not exist because you choose not to make yourself heard. If there are injustices and crimes happening to you or those you know, your silence is almost a sanction for such actions.

As a final note on free speech, for those of you who spend your time looking for mistakes in the Monroe Doctrine, consider this, we like to print something for everyone. I think so!

Welcome to a perfect example of the First Amendment Freedom of Speech, the Monroe Doctrine.

Thomas Paine described the era of the American Revolution as "the times that try men's souls." Our current times are still trying men's (and women's) souls, and in many ways the grand experiment that was begun then is still continuing.

For seventy years the Soviet Union was a repressive regime that ruled its people so tightly that their every word was election day.

- You have more than one speaking engagement on the same day.

- And, one of your engagements consists of no more than 12% of the total voter registration.

Which would be your top priority? I know it is not right, but it is real.

The good news is that we can prevent something like this from happening again: Register to vote, and then vote.

Response To Right-To-Life Letter

In response to October 21 letter titled "Students for Life."

Come on Stephanie, read what you wrote, and I quote, "We (students for life) are not here to force our ideas on you." Right before that you wrote, and I quote again, "We are an informational group on campus which is here to inform the student body about the sanctity of human life." Sounds like a little idea forcing to me.

It is no secret that the right to life movement is laced with righteousness, homophobia, and a very narrow, unrealistic view of the human condition. I cannot quietly sit back and tolerate this any longer.

Stephanie, if you could just lift your eyes above the line up of fetal models, maybe you would see that if we lose our choice, we will next lose our voice. This past fiasco with Clarence Thomas is a prime example of that.

If we as women stay divided, then we will become weaker and weaker, gradually forced into a corner with duct tape over our mouths....pushed back into the dark ages where a women's place is on her back.

It figures you would close your article with the quote "If a man loses reverence for any part of life, he will lose reverence for all of life." What about a woman Stephanie????? Sounds like you have already slipped into the dark ages.

Welcome to; the real world! I had to work the day Tom Frey was scheduled to speak at MCC. Had I planned to attend, I too would have been disappointed. CAB CORNER

CAB'S FAMILY/PM PROGRAM COMMITTEE would like to thank all the clubs and organizations of MCC's Student Association for their help with Spooktacular II. We had close to 400 trick-or-treaters and their parents on October 30 at our Safe Halloween, held in the MCC Terrace. This proves that our Student Association can come together and pull off great events!

Spooktacular was a huge success and CAB looks forward to working with MCC's clubs and organizations in many of our upcoming events.

We held a trick-or-treat alley contest between our clubs and organizations in which they had to build a house for the kids to get candy from. We chose as our winner the Business and Accounting Club for their igloo.

The true success of any of CAB's programs depends on student body involvement. We would like to thank everyone who showed up to enjoy our program and invite you to all our others. We are always advertising our upcoming programs on the back of the Monroe Doctrine.

Once again, thanks to everyone who helped make Spooktacular II an outstanding event!

King Missile Was King At Hiccups

By Mark Tichenor
and Ray Messina

On Monday, November 4, Hiccups Underground hosted a benefit for WBEB featuring King Missile, an alternative quartet which sports its own unique blend of metal, punk, and storytelling.

Hiccups Underground is a popular comedy club on Andrews Street which frequently hosts national comedians. Painted black, with many tables, wide open floor space, and a bar, Hiccups Underground provided an ideal setting in which to showcase King Missile's myriad talents.

The show was late in starting, and apparently someone thought that the crowd would be appeased by the playing of an entire Steely Dan CD. It didn't upplumbing. The audience was quite courteous and appreciative, treating her with a level of respect surpassing that of most and not at all showy or flashy. In fact, half the stage was built of exposed plywood, and the keyboards were set up on an old ironing board.

Singer John Hall came out before the rest of the band and killed time by striking up a conversation with the audience, eating a banana and fielding questions from the audience. The other band members came out, and immediately launched into a ripping, devastating set, performing such gems as "Cheesecake Truck," "Sex With You," "Jesus was Way Cool," "The Indians," and "My Heart is a Flower." During the set, they also covered other bands' songs, like the Beastie Boys' "You've Got to Fight for your Right to Party!," "We Will Rock You" by Queen, and even a snippet of Metallica's "Enter Sandman." The band grudgingly performed an encore, complaining about how inane encores were. In fact, they never really left the stage beforehand. They ended their encore with an a capella version of "Take Stuff from Work."

After King Missile ended their final set, they very courteously stood in the stairwell and thanked every fan as they left. Afterwards the band posed for pictures. "I mean, that's way cool." No wonder there are so many King Missile fans!

"I mean, that's way cool."

The opening act was a lone woman with a guitar who described her music as "Feminist Toilet Songs." She was really funny, delivering songs and monologues about many topics, including drugs and backed-opening acts. Her set was short, but provided a strong counterpoint to what was to follow.

On came the lights, and in went a Cars CD, as a King Missile roadie (yes, a roadie.) set up the stage, which was very small

LIVE BABY LIVE

The problem with live albums is that they really don't allow bands to change. They are, in effect, constrained by their current repertoires. The problem with INXS is that of an innovative, downright fantastic alternative band slipping downhill into a vapid pop pit. In Live Baby Live, they only perform three of their early songs: "Burn for You," "The One Thing," and "This Time." The rest of the material consists of all those songs off of Kick and X.

The album cover and jacket are chock full of pictures of INXS in all their glory as the vanguard of guitar-pop. Flamingos don't even preen this much. And oh, my! Doesn't Michael Hutchence look sexy in those remarkably Jim Morrison-like leather pants!

The tracks on this album haven't even varied in format. They sound like the studio versions with an applause track added. The band did not even attempt to inject any personality into the songs.

In summary, it seems that INXS has been with us too long.

They've obviously outlived any inspirational genius that they once possessed, and have resorted to recycled riffs and sex-symbol imagery to sell records. This live album can have no purpose besides raking more profits for our little Australian capitalists. INXS is definitely a band that has lived up to its name.

A Factory Full Of Funk

by Ketan Patel

The C and C Music Factory, along with Rhythm Syndicate and comedian Kevin James staged an amazing performance at SUNY Fredonia this past weekend. The three hour drive through a snow storm in Buffalo was well worth it to experience the effect of: "the mastery/ of the C and C Music Factory/ which is full of jams/ that have to be/ pumped 'til ears get sore/ right down from Brooklyn/ to the California sea shore."

The concert started promptly with Kevin James, a standup comedian who has appeared on MTV's half-hour comedy show and is currently working on the set of "Candid Camera". Kevin humored the audience with stories of shopping with one's mother and of driving a Yugo.

Kevin James was followed by Rhythm Syndicate, a powerful group rising through the singles chart with their storming hit "P-A-S-S-I-O-N". They certainly captured the audience with powerful vocals and saxophone solos. The lead singer of Rhythm Syndicate is certainly bound to rise in the music industry. His Prince-like image seemed to captivate the stares of the ladies in the place. The Rhythm Syndicate has potential. It is one of only a few rap-oriented dance music groups that incorporates a guitar player. Although the guitar is not used as frequently as NWA does, it adds spice to their music.

The sound and lighting effects were superb. Unlike most rap-oriented dance music concerts, the music was just loud enough to hear the vocals clearly as opposed to just the drone of the bass. The tech crews for the concert were composed of theater majors from Fredonia State. They must be commended on their adequate performance. The college student managed concert was comparable to a professionally run one.

The show had not begun yet, the crowd still had to be thrilled by the equation that states: ROCK+ SOUL+ FUNK+ POP+ TECHNO= C+C MUSIC FACTORY. The crowd still had to be moved by the music of the show stomping, be-bopping, hip-hopping, hits jamming, power dancing Freedom Williams and Zelma Davis of the Clivilles and Cole Music Factory.

The attendance of almost 2000 were surely amazed when

Freedom stepped on stage wearing a tweed jacket, a poloneck, and baggy pants. This is not attire one would expect Freedom to possess let alone wear. The question racing through the minds of the audience was whether Freedom was going to get down and boogie or did he "hose" us. But things were put straight when with a four foot jump he began to get down in a "stupid dope" manner. Then it happened that the stage was lighted and not by the lights but the utter beauty and sheer magnificence of Zelma Davis. But the men were put to shame with the moves of Freedom and his dance crew. The dances were just as stunning as those in the videos shown on TV. They did not waste time in doing their thing. They started with their biggest hit, "Things That Make You Go Hmmm."

Freedom is probably one of the most popular up and coming artists on the dance scene. He is also probably one of the classiest men in the business. Not only is he suave but he can dance, to say the least. This performer has the power to captivate any audience. The song, "Everybody Dance Now" turned the concert hall into a dance floor. Freedom is very talented, but so is Zelma. Zelma must have changed her clothes for every song. Her vocals are so strong she does not need the attention of wearing such revealing clothes. When seeing her in her first outfit, one would have thought if she wore any less clothing it would have been illegal. Obviously, we were wrong. With every change of her clothes she looked sexier.

On the whole, the show was a great success and very entertaining. One can only hope something like this could happen at MCC, keep on dreaming, and for everybody not to forget to dance now.

Bookstore Scares It's Readers

by Ketan Patel

On October 31, the MCC Bookstore played host to many strange characters and animals that would normally not be allowed in the shop. Barnyard animals to famous actors, phantoms to mother-in laws, it seemed like everyone and everything was in attendance at the "happening" bookstore.

Surprisingly enough there were no Jason look alikes, a common Halloween figure. The contestants were dressed in a variety of different costumes from all walks of life. Most of the them were very original and well tailored. It appears that most of the students were dressed up for the WMCC Halloween show, which unfortunately was canceled.

The administration seemed to take a greater interest in the event and Halloween in general than the student body did. This may be due to the fact that the administrators have children at home to keep the Halloween spirit alive. Well, there was no doubt that the Halloween spirits were alive at MCC this year.

This year's contest was a great success with almost twice the attendance of last year. The contest was held throughout the day, masked characters walked in and out of the bookstore in their fancy and ghoulish attires all through the day, unlike last year when only a few contestants showed up at college hour.

It was a tough decision to judge the top three costumes. The staff of the bookstore struggled to make the difficult judgement call. Finally they decided that Death should emerge victorious in the contest. Death, the character from Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey, was portrayed by Peter Belanger. Even though Pee Wee Herman (Dan Cornell) was caught in the magazine section of the bookstore, doing something that cannot be published, he took second place. Third place was awarded to the "Old Crusty Man". All prizes were provided by the MCC Bookstore and were as follows: 1st prize-a choice of sweatshirt from the bookstore, 2nd prize a Bills T-shirt and mug and 3rd stationary.

The bookstore must be commended on it's efforts. Also, all who participated must be thanked for making it yet again a lively, (or rather a dead) campus this Halloween.

M.C.C. Tribunes Ready For #1

A club that plays like the Denver Nuggets on offense but the Detroit Pistons on defense?

It's a difficult combination to come by, but head coach Jerry Burns thinks his Monroe Community College men's basketball team can fill both roles nicely in 1991-92. The Tribunes open their season next Saturday, Nov. 9, with a 7:30 p.m. home game against Mohawk Valley CC.

"We'll look to fast-break, but we'll also be known as a team that plays the hardest defense in the region," said Burns, the first year coach. "My philosophy is that you must attack the opponent both offensively and defensively. We'll be playing 95 per cent man-to-man."

Obviously this style requires players to be in top physical shape, and Burns, who spent the two previous seasons as a Division I assistant at Wagner College, reports, "We've had the best pre-season conditioning program I've experienced in my five years as a college coach. No games will be lost this year due to lack of effort."

There's a lot of proven talent to go along with this strong work ethic: MCC returns two of its biggest contributors from last year's club, shooting guard Rob Nurse (New York City/Bishop Loughlin) and center Derrick Jordan (New York/Boys & Girls).

This pair helped MCC to a final 1990-91 record of 24-7. The Tribunes also received the No. 1 seed in the National Junior College Athletic Association Region

III tournament, reaching the semifinals; and they finished second in Penn-York Conference play.

Nurse placed second on the 1990-91 club in scoring average, getting 17.2 points per game. He was also the club leader in steals, second in three-point baskets, and third in rebounds.

Jordan, who split time in the middle last year, was MCC's leading rebounder both offensively and defensively, averaging 8.2 boards per game. He also scored 6.1 points a game, a statistic that's expected to increase dramatically as Jordan assumes a full-time role.

"Rob needs to lead us on the offensive end, and Derrick will become a definite inside threat this year," said Burns.

One of two Rochester-area player in the starting lineup is East high graduate Will Kendrick, a freshman who's expected to make immediate contributions at forward. "Will has the ability to do many things, and I know he'll live up to the challenge," said Burns.

At offensive guard is freshman Charles Reese, an Edison Tech graduate. "Charles plays extremely good defense and can score when needed," said Burns.

Rounding out the starting five is freshman point guard Warren Ross (New York/Andrew Jackson). "Warren is perfect for our up-tempo style. He's also a good pressure player on defense," Burns remarked.

MCC's first man off the bench is freshman Sean Polite (New York/Tolentine), who switches between off guard and small forward.

Sophomore Greg James (New York/Benjamin Cardozo) is the other remaining veteran from 1990-91. A forward, he's expected to see a substantial increase in playing time.

Completing the roster are sophomore Dave Hunt (Syracuse/Marcellus) at center, and freshmen Matt Cecil (Fairport/Fairport) and Mario Tabb (Buffalo/Burgard Vocational) as guards.

MCC should gain extra strength after the holidays as three more players are expected to become eligible next semester: forward Amos Nicholson (Syracuse/Nottingham) and guards Jerone Boone (New York/Thomas Edison) and Dale O'Neal (North Rose/North Rose-Wolcott).

Burns thinks the Tribunes have the talent to put together another winning season. "I see a ton of potential; they have the ability to do anything they want."

The key, he says, is togetherness: "If the other team has five individuals who are all better players, but you play together and they don't, then I believe you will beat that opponent."

lege", he added, "would spread disease throughout the whole area."

Flynn said that appeals made by students have been looked at on a case by case basis and that pleas of mitigating circumstances have been made by students, four of which have been granted. These students are now actively enrolled and attending classes at MCC.

Gigliotti said, "It is our intent to comply with the law and to get students to do the same. We have no desire to be punitive about it."

Flynn concluded by saying that an investigation is under way to analyze the situation and determine the causes for student non-compliance, and that a follow up report will be issued in December.
